

A Brief History of the Wm. B. Tennison

The bugeye Wm. B. Tennison is a Chesapeake Bay oyster dredge boat built in 1899 in Crabb Island, Maryland, for B.P. and R. L. Miles.

Her hull is “chunk-built”- that is, made of nine logs instead of the frame-and-plank type of construction used more frequently for bugeyes built in the late nineteenth century. Initially powered by sail, the Tennison engaged in the coasting trade as well as the oyster industry. In 1906-07 her sail rig was removed, she was converted to power, and a new and larger cabin was added aft. She became an oyster buyboat, purchasing oysters from work boats at the oyster beds and taking them to oyster-packing houses.

In 1978 the Calvert Marine Museum purchased the Tennison from J.C. Lore and Sons, Inc., and in 1979 she passed the first of her yearly inspections, earning approval to carry 40 passengers. The Tennison is the only Coast Guard-licensed, log hulled vessel in the United States.

The Tennison's long survival is a tribute to her builders and former owners, including Alton Kersey of Solomons.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

There are no rain dates.

In case of inclement weather, food will still be provided at the museum and a refund will be given on the cruise only.

A Brief History of the Dee of St. Mary's

The Dee of St. Mary's was commissioned by Jack Russell and built by Francis Goddard in 1979 in Piney Point, Maryland. Originally used in the commercial oyster fishery, she dredged for 10 seasons. When the oyster populations dwindled, Captain Russell transitioned the Dee from a commercial vessel to educational uses under the heading of Chesapeake Bay Field Lab. She has been a floating classroom since 1989. Major restoration was done on the Dee from 2010 to 2012, funded largely by grants from the Maryland Heritage Area Consortium. Ownership was turned over to the Calvert Marine Museum in May 2013 where she is currently docked.

STATS

Like all Chesapeake work boats, the Dee has a shallow draft to negotiate the waters along the shorelines and a wide bottom for stability. She is constructed mostly of white oak and spruce pine.
